OUR MISSION STATEMENT

“To give our youth an education that shall be American in character — to enable them to act as well as to think — to execute as well as to conceive — ‘to tolerate all opinions when reason is left free to combat them’ — to make moral, patriotic, efficient, and useful citizens, and to qualify them for all those high responsibilities resting upon a citizen of this free republic.”

CHAIRMAN'S LETTER

As chairman of the Board of Trustees of Norwich University, I am pleased to present this year's annual report. Within its pages you will find highlights from the past year, a list of donors, financial statements, and perhaps most important, information about the Forging the Future campaign and bicentennial commemoration. I hope you will take time to read it, as it bears witness to the profound impact of the Norwich family on our communities and our country.

This fall marks the beginning of our Year of Transformation: the second in a series of five bicentennial themes leading up to our 200th anniversary in 2019. Throughout the year, in a variety of ways, we will be celebrating how Norwich transforms lives. If you have engaged with Norwich by volunteering, making a donation, or contributing to our institution in myriad other ways, you have participated in Norwich's timeless legacy of transformation.

I am a product of the transformative power of a Norwich education. Norwich's impact on me was so great as to be incalculable, and is the reason I remain so passionate about the school. Norwich builds character by teaching values: honor, integrity, service, teamwork, self-discipline, and perseverance. More than 50 years ago these values molded me into the person I became, and they continue to transform the lives of our students today.

Since the days of Alden Partridge, Norwich University has been in the business of educating and training leaders of character. The campus may change, but our mission of producing citizen-soldiers to build, strengthen, and protect the republic is immutable.

Norwich forever!

INSIDE THE “SIT ROOM”

Thanks to Norwich Alumni, DC Policy Trip
Transforms NU Students’ Political Worldview

In March, a group of Norwich students traveled to Washington, D.C., for an intensive public-policy immersion experience. After weeks of classroom preparation and following a succession of meetings with high-ranking officials, the students were cleared into the White House Situation Room, where, acting as an expanded version of the National Security Council, they were tasked with managing a simulated crisis of international proportions.

Half the country just woke up to no electrical power.

The scenario: A coordinated cyberattack against the United States had left the Eastern Seaboard grid compromised, along with widespread outages in the Rocky Mountain states and most of California. “This attack paralyzed two cornerstones critical to all levels of U.S. activity and organization: energy and cyberspace,” says Michael Penn ’16, who served in the roles of U.S. cybersecurity coordinator and special assistant to the president. Moreover, Penn says, “simple utilities—heating, cooling, refrigeration—needed to sustain life, were also crippled.”

Andrew Ennis ’15, acting as secretary of energy, quickly got to work. On a normal day, the energy secretary regulates the energy sector and develops policies for new-energy technology, energy education, and energy-grid systems, including nuclear power plants. The energy secretary also helps coordinate with industry partners on response during emergencies. During the 18-hour simulation, Ennis managed recovery efforts between public- and private-energy providers, and collected situation reports, all in preparation to brief the president on “the extent of the damage and the projected timetable for recovering from the attack.”

Out of the Classroom: Experiential Learning

The simulation was part of a Norwich D.C. Policy Week capstone event, the culminating exercise of a course titled “U.S. Security Policy and the Private Sector” led by Political Science Professor Dart Thalman. In the classroom, Thalman familiarized his students with national-security policy and the roles of public- and private-sector leaders during times of crisis. In advance of the exercise, each student was assigned his or her role as an official in a government organization and spent weeks preparing for the simulation. But lectures can only take you so far.

College of Liberal Arts Dean Andrea Talentino says that when you’re at a distance it’s easy to say things are black and white, right and wrong, good or bad. “But when you’re there, and learn firsthand the different interests and competing needs that decision-makers need to balance, it opens up your eyes to all that is simultaneously exciting, complex, and weighty about leadership.”

To that end, Thalman says the simulation was “quite sobering and challenging for even the best-prepared students.”

Showtime in the “Sit Room”

In the days leading up to the simulation, the students visited institutions and participated in meetings with officials, including a rare face-to-face with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell. Several NU alumni working in national-security operations and policy development also volunteered their time and insider connections to enrich the students’ experience.

Then, on Thursday after a long day on Capitol Hill, the group proceeded to the White House where they met the organizers, including Cheri Caddy ’90, then-National Security Council director for cybersecurity policy; Caddy had arranged for their access to the West Wing and served as their White House escort.

In a 30-minute meeting in the Situation Room (known to staff as the “Sit Room”), they were briefed on the parameters of the crisis, then moved next door to the Eisenhower Executive Office Building, where they spent the next several hours preparing their report for a briefing the next day. Friday morning, they headed to the Booz Allen Hamilton headquarters for more preparations. The briefing began at noon.

Mike McConnell, a retired Navy vice admiral and former director of both National Intelligence and the National Security Agency, portrayed the president of the United States.

In Washington, D.C., in March, Norwich public-policy students played the roles of high-ranking government officials in an 18-hour simulated crisis. They began in the White House Situation Room before moving to the Cordell Hull Room (above) in the historic Eisenhower Executive Office Building, part of the White House complex.

“Admiral McConnell grilled the students on all aspects of the crisis,” says Caddy, who now works for the Department of Defense. “He quickly got the students to focus in on the facts of the situation, and separate out speculation. ‘What you know, what you don’t know, and what you think—these are critical to keep separate,’ he instructed, challenging them to think about the downstream impacts of their recommendations. What response would deter the adversary? What response would help de-escalate the crisis? What could we expect the counter-response to be, from both adversaries and allies? ‘It’s not easy,’ Admiral McConnell concluded. ‘Whatever you decide, there are consequences. Only history will judge whether you got it right or wrong. There are no right answers here.’”

Reflecting on the experience, Andrew Ennis says he will never forget the “surreal” feeling of being in the Situation Room. “I never imagined that, as a kid who grew up in a small rural town, I would be sitting in the same chairs where some of the greatest leaders of the free world do important and difficult work during our nation’s most trying times.”

Michael Penn sums up his overall experience as “amazing, astonishing, remarkable, and wonderful,” saying it served “as great motivation as I aspire to help our country on the same level as those who have filled these chairs in the past.” ✪

CALL TO ACTION: Why We Do It

March 2015 represented the second year of D.C. Policy Week, and its success has spurred Norwich faculty sponsors and alumni volunteers to make it an annual program. It takes a small army, including support from the CoLA Board of Fellows Committee and the NUAA Board, to make the event happen. NUAA Board member and then-White House staffer Cheri Caddy ’90 took the students on a tour of the West Wing and Oval Office—areas not accessible to the general public. Jon Allen ’94, of the NU Board of Fellows, arranged for Admiral McConnell to act as president during the simulation. NU alumni served as expert mentors and advisors along the way.

Board of Fellows member Tony Johnson ’94, the D.C. coordinator for the event, says it’s important for him to stay involved because Norwich transformed him into the person he is today. “If you love Norwich like I do, you should understand that giving your time and energy to help Norwich students reach their full potential is important to the entire community.”

Fellow Chuck Nettleship ’85 & M’03, who identified the simulation topic and connected the group with many top experts, stresses the importance of adding value to students’ experiential learning. “I challenge Norwich alumni to consider giving their time, knowledge, or resources to mentor our undergraduates and recent graduates.”

The students also got face time with Army LTG Mark Bowman ’78 and BG Frank Muth ’86. Bowman heads the Joint Staff J6. “He’s basically in charge of our military’s eyes and ears,” Johnson says. Muth leads the U.S. Army Quadrennial Defense Review Office, which plans how the Army will execute its mission requirements.

Most alumni participants have supported the program for both of the past two years, and plan to support the program in the future. See thenorwichrecord.com for a full list of participating alumni.

To get involved in future D.C. trips, contact Tony Johnson ’94: tonyjdc@icloud.com.

Professor Thalman’s policy students weren’t the only Norwich group in D.C. during spring break. Criminal justice instructor David Orrick and students from the NU Criminal Justice Student Association visited the nation’s capital, taking tours of the DEA, FBI, DHS, and other law-enforcement organizations. Board of Fellows Members Scott Shelton ’97, Clem Hourican ’84, Barbara Foreman M’04, and past board member Ed Oberti ’82 were instrumental in making this happen.

Transforming Space,

The Kreitzberg Library Renovation: The First Forging The Future Campaign Project Completed

Throughout the summer, the buzzing of sanders, saws, drills, and cement mixers reverberated on all six levels of the Kreitzberg Library. Meanwhile, library staff and volunteers worked feverishly, moving stacks of books back and forth from one floor to another, to allow for the demolition and construction to proceed unimpeded. Finally, and without ceremony or fanfare, the long sheet of brown paper protecting Norwich's elegant, gold-leaf mission statement came down, and the doors to a new, improved Kreitzberg library opened.

Once inside the spacious new entryway, any feelings of ambivalence one might have had about the nine-month-long, $6.8 million renovation project instantly disappear. From the cathedral ceiling overhead to the Old South Barracks bricks below, the impact of the transformation is immediate and stunning. Gone is the staid atmosphere; on every floor, an abundance of natural light and wide open space beckons one to sit, stay, and relax.

But an improved setting is only the tip of the iceberg. The new Kreitzberg received a complete overhaul from top to bottom, such that its former interior configuration is almost indiscernible. And what is truly remarkable is that all of these improvements and upgrades were accomplished without having to reduce the number of volumes in the library's book collection.

Right: The spiral staircase that formerly led from the fourth to the fifth floor has been removed and the hole in the floor filled in. What remains is a lovely circular meeting room with attractive display cases and recessed lighting in the ceiling that changes color!

According to Library Director Greg Sauer, the renovation has reclaimed significant amounts of square footage, optimally repurposed space, and made the building exponentially more open and welcoming. "The Kreitzberg Library was already busy and well-used, but these upgrades have transformed our building into an even more active space for interactive learning and socializing."

The New, Improved Kreitzberg Library

The way information is accessed and shared has changed dramatically since the Kreitzberg Library was designed more than 25 years ago. Through enhanced technology and more flexible spaces and furniture, the renovated library now features state-of-the-art tools for sharing information. The new Kreitzberg is busy, bright, open, and student-focused, yet has preserved quiet spaces for peaceful reflection.

Capacity: By reclaiming and restructuring space, the total student seating capacity in the library has increased by 80 percent. In addition, the types and distribution of furniture include many more upholstered chairs and couches, open tables, and group-study rooms.

Transforming Learning

It's all in the details

Group-Study Rooms: The number of group-study rooms has significantly increased, from two to eleven, and they now allow students to connect multiple devices. These private spaces are available to all for meetings, interactive learning, and tutoring.

Enhanced Technology: A key goal of the renovation was upgrading and leveraging technology. Thanks in part to a $125,000 grant from the George I. Alden Trust, Internet speed and data capacity in the library is now the fastest on campus! In addition, group-study rooms and open areas have tools for sharing screens, and there are 16 new computers connected to printers for student use.

Café: The northeast corner of the first floor (formerly the circulation desk) is now a café where the entire campus community can purchase snacks and beverages.

New Instruction Spaces: The renovation introduces two large instruction rooms on either end of the Mezzanine to be used by faculty and staff for teaching specialized classes. The south pod space features wireless technology for team-based learning, while the north pod space offers ultimate flexibility. These rooms will serve as a testing ground to help determine the types of instructional spaces that will occupy the yet-to-be-designed Mack Hall.

Single-Service-Point Library Help Desk:

The circulation and reference desks have been consolidated into a single-service point in front of the grand stairway. Students and faculty can get research help, pick up reserve and interlibrary loan items, and check out materials at one convenient location.

Improved Space for Counseling and the Academic Achievement Center:

The fourth floor has undergone a significant transformation, having been opened up as a hub for collaborative learning. In addition, more adequate office, tutoring, and testing spaces for the Academic Achievement Center have been added, as well as a centralized waiting area and offices for the Counseling Center.

Expanded University Archives: On the fifth floor, a second reading room has been added to the Archives to accommodate more space for students, staff, and faculty to study the collections.

For more on the Kreitzberg Library renovation, visit academics.norwich.edu/library/category/renovation-news. Or better yet, visit in person!

Left: Library patrons will be delighted to know that the Old South Barracks bricks have been preserved and protected, and are now located just inside the library's main entrance. Beneath the NU plaque is a time capsule that was buried when the building was first dedicated in 1993.
